ECA VRT 2011 DVD-R [EU].rar Q: Convert list of strings to strings with arrays I have a list of strings like this: ['a1','a2','a3'] And I need to transform into a list of strings like this: ['a1','a2','a3'] a1,a2,a3 How could I achieve this? A: This is a typical sample for a list comprehension: >>> l = ['a1','a2','a3'] >>> l = [x.strip(' ') for x in l] >>> l ['a1', 'a2', 'a3'] Effect of macromolecular crowding and temperature on the steady-state and dynamic characteristics of a thermally activated molecular switch. Molecular switches (MSs) based on Förster resonance energy transfer (FRET) are promising materials for use as multifunctional components in nanotechnology applications, such as molecular logic gates and nano-thermometers. However, the current design strategies of MSs have largely ignored the effect of environmental parameters on their mechanical, optical, and electrochemical properties, as these factors have been treated as constant. In this paper, we present a theoretical analysis of the effect of the macromolecular (MM) environment on the conformational equilibria, and fluctuations of a FRET pair-based MS. Specifically, we used a coarse-grained molecular model to analyze the effect of MM size and MM concentration on the statistical properties of the MS and on its steady-state response to either temperature or concentration of a putative chemical trigger. Our results show that the solvent properties significantly alter the stability and response of the MS. Specifically, MM-concentration and MM-size affect the second-order and third-order frequency moments of the MS energy landscape, respectively. In addition, MM-concentration regulates the frequency distribution of transition times between the states of the MS and the FRET efficiency, while MM-size and MM-size-concentration alter the energy landscape of the system. The obtained results provide a better understanding of

Some models are created in a single step, while others use multiple print heads to build layers of a material onto a support platform, which is also known as a bed. Others may be used for prototype or experimental applications to confirm a design. Why choose 3D printing? The possibilities for what can be created using 3D printing are limited only by the imagination of the designer and the available materials and machinery. Using this technology, people in other disciplines such as architecture, medicine, dentistry and engineering can design and produce prototypes using 3D-printing. Whether it's for jewellery, personalised gifts, alternative housing, accessories or prototypes, 3D printing is widely used in a variety of fields and product-development process. In addition, 3D printing techniques can also be used to produce needed design and production parts for a range of industries including aerospace, automotive, electronics, automotive, industrial and military. A radical new way of producing goods and products 3D printing is increasingly being used to manufacture products and components that are complex, and in some cases not suited for mass manufacturing. Instead of producing large quantities in mass production, the finished products are fabricated using 3D printing at each stage of production, which enables small quantities of various products to be customised and made to exact specifications, effectively avoiding problems associated with mass production such as oversized raw 0cc13bf012
