5.4. Manual acinic prostatic surgery with hormonal therapy natronamide. Methodology The researchers used ComRes poll results and a large survey of NHS staff to give a dynamic picture of what's happening in the NHS this year. Our polling methodology is offered through a panel of survey companies, each of whom has been selected for a range of key qualities and price points. When making a survey selection, the company is only able to offer up to around 15 per cent of the audience from their panel. The company promises to randomly select a pool of people and reach them by telephone. The typical cost per completed question is around 11p. Our market knowledge and insight team provide ongoing support with question selection and weighting. How we're using the research

As a well-respected researcher for our own polling, we've the capability to combine the information with our own qualitative research. This enables us to add another layer of insight and perform a more in-depth exploration of the data.

Our full methodology is available on request. Our polling dates butterfly which is present in the mountains of Scandinavia, Canada and Russia. Description The northern parnassius can be distinguished from other Parnassius species by the features of the upperside as well as by the overall size. The upperside of the male northern parnassius is lighter in colour than the forewing upperside of the other Parnassius. The upperside of the hindwings is also lighter in colour than in the other Parnassius species. The male northern parnassius has a black to dark brown medial band on the underwing upperside which is more pronounced than in the other Parnassius species. The large median spot on the hindwing upperside of the male northern parnassius is triangular, black and conspicuous. Distribution and habitat The northern parnassius is present in Scandinavia, Russia and Canada. These butterflies mainly inhabit mountains with glacier and alpine tundra, where they can be found at altitudes of around above sea level. They are found at highest altitudes in the high mountains of both Scandinavia and Canada. This butterfly is found in open habitats, typically bogs and wet meadows with Sphagnum.
