Mr. F knows about my intent to leave the club and was fairly vocal in saying that he would have no problem with my leaving, as long as I wasn't selling my business off piece by piece (which he and I would work out - like splitting the Lexus). I had no intention of selling a piece of my business. This post is not meant to start that conversation. This does however, keep me from doing what I came here to do. I have a meeting with a potential customer tomorrow and I need a go to plan if he does pick up the phone and talk to me. I have a prospecting list and a marketing plan, but they do not take the place of a plan. In an effort to stay on topic, I came up with a plan. I plan to do some research, take a small part of the business and base the plan on how I can best leverage the new knowledge. I plan to buy half of the people in our business and begin to implement a marketing plan that is based upon information that we have been giving our guys that is not readily available to the average person. It will be for a limited time, but it will be a good gauge for the direction we need to take the business. My goal is not to say that we all need to be on a certain plan. My goal is to get the guys excited about
