What's new:

! Back to my favorite subject, dinosaurs! This is my right hand so you know where the bones aren't missing! In addition to being a paleontologist I spent a lot of time hunting in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. At one point, I could have hunted for a lifetime. I know how to back country hunt so often I'll go off trail. This time I was back hunting so I found a spot to stay in for a good two week hunt. I didn't care if I never made it home. I went up to a sporting goods store and bought the biggest bag of doughnuts I could find. A lunch box, a tent and a nice heavy jacket served me well. The next morning I got up about 3:30 am and went in search of something to chase down. Funny thing, the cook at the bed and breakfast had forgotten to make her doughnuts in the middle of the night. I thought about a snack from the doughnuts, but it wasn't worth my time. Sure, I could have tried eating like 10 but life is too short for that kinda stuff. So what do I do? I creep up on a large-sized buck and stalk him. I like to hunt them like cowbells. No, really. I stalk them backwards as I creep up on them. In other words, I move real slow like a dino. Get a half a mile behind him and let him smell me. I like to see where he's headed. If he keeps going in one direction I break into a run to keep him confused. I became so nocturnal that everything started to look different. Trails became shallow, your eyes got used to the darkness. I make some serious noise while I stalk. I try to stay quiet and still. I let him see me when I move and sneak up on him, hoping he's just a little nervous because his eyes are growing accustomed to the dark. Maybe this man isn't a full sized deer, but he looks like he could be, so I don't let him get too far away. Well, I've always loved when the really big animals stand up to a 1500 lbs. hunter. Your little crossbow does barely a nick that side of his neck. I can, with my 16 lb. rifle load a broadside shot into his chest and leave him drained. Most of the time I hunt them with a vantage point within 7-10 yards. I like to get within a few feet before I
