Laparoscopic radical nephrectomy with carbon dioxide pneumoperitoneum can be considered feasible but is associated with complications. This study aimed to evaluate the safety and indications for the technique in our own experience. Prospective study of patients undergoing minimally invasive radical nephrectomy (LN) by laparoscopy. From January 1998 to June 2004, 8 patients underwent LN for T1 or T2 tumours. The LN were performed with an 11 mm trocar and a 30 degrees laparoscope. A 10 mm trocar was left for laparoscopic ultrasound and suprapubic catheter insertion. The technique was facilitated by the 'forceps' device. The LN was completed in 7 cases (87.5%). The mean operating time was 252 +/- 52 minutes. There were no intraoperative complications and the histologic specimen was of adequate size. The average time of suprapubic catheter was 2.9 +/- 0.6 days. There was no postoperative complication in patients with renal cell carcinoma (RCC) and no conversion to open surgery was performed. The operating time was 30 min more than the first four cases. The technique of LN with carbon dioxide pneumoperitoneum is feasible in cases with renal neoplasm. An experienced surgical team must perform these procedures in an appropriate environment. However, the technique has to be used selectively as the conversion to open surgery is significantly increased.[Search for a universal screening instrument: the PDS in diagnosing childhood atopy]. To investigate the validity of the local instrument Paediatric Dermatological Screening (PDS) in diagnosing atopic dermatitis (AD) and atopic eczema (AE) in children. An anonymous self-reporting questionnaire with 20 questions was used to examine whether the PDS detects such diseases 0cc13bf012
