By a deal signed with Koch Industries, the NBCUniversal-owned logo has been added to the “Liberty Street” sign formerly only used by Gizmodo Media, Inc. As NBCU corporate raider Sumner Redstone explains: “Both these organizations share a common cause.” That cause is anything that will help their corporate masters make more money. The FCC will also get a glimpse of reality at 10 a.m. when the endorsement process for the Republican presidential debate begins online. The critical step to save America from the Koch Bros’ plantation is to replace the GOMORAD/GIZMODO-NBCU corporate logo with this one for a new alternative web news media site to launch on September 12. EnjoyThe use of an antibiotic binder in the preparation of spray dried powders or lyophilized powders is known. Examples of such antibiotics include ibuprofen, indomethacin, griseofulvin, dihydrofolate, erythromycin, clindamycin, lincomycin, vancomycin, and chloramphenicol. U.S. Pat. No. 4,182,763 teaches the use of an antibiotic polymer to provide improved processing characteristics and prolonged shelf life, when preparing amorphous solid dispersions of the antibiotic. The antibiotic polymer is a combination of a polyanion which binds the antibiotic and a polycation which may be used to increase the stability of the particle size. Antibiotic binding polymers are often obtained by copolymerizing an antibiotic, such as warfarin, and a polymeric antibiotic (see for example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 4,182,763 and 4,587,261, and International Application No. PCT/US 91/02023). Such antibiotic binding polymers are typically used in the active pharmaceutical ingredient form, either dissolved or dispersed in a carrier medium, i.e., in aqueous or non-aqueous forms. Moreover, the antibiotic binding polymers are generally produced by emulsion polymerization techniques in the presence of a free radical initiator such as ammonium persulfate. The resulting polymers are cross-linked to form aggregates. The antibiotic binding polymer is typically a water soluble polymer having a mass of between 20,000 and 50,000 Da with a molecular weight of between 100 and 5,000,000. When the antibiotic binding polymer is in the form of an aqueous dispersion, it may be obtained by diluting a concentrated form of the polymer with a carrier medium, e.g., water, such that the resulting composition is pharmaceutically acceptable. When the polymer is in non-aqueous form, it may be obtained from the initial polymer by emulsification, i.e., by dispersing the polymer in a suitable solvent. The use of antibiotics binding polymers in the solid dispersion form has been found to be advantageous in that they can be
